Sunday
June 18, 1899

Having outfitted at Nueva Casas Grandes we left there at 2 P.M. on above date for the sierra ^ Madre. Crossed the dry bed of Casas Grandes River, went in sight of the old ruins about 1/4 mile above the Mex. town & then made for the barren hills to the westward.
The wagon road led us directly to Colonia Juarez where we stopped overnight with Mr. Harper, one of the mason colonists. He says about half the colonists have taken out Mexican naturalization papers. In the evening a dozen or more young men & women came in & played for the organ & sang, saying man repeated a poem temperance. This colony is about 12 years old, has the town laid out in regular streets & most of the houses are small, neatly made brick cottages (sometimes 2 story) & surrounded by peach, apple & pear trees & other small fruits are cultivated & ^{cannot} remain a local factory. The ~~town~~ town has no saloon or billiard room & one of the young men said that the prosperous character of the colony was due to the absence of saloons & gambling so that the money earned by the people was utilized for home improvements. The showing for the period spent here - the tree shaded streets & thrifty orchards is an admirable one. The 12 years has evidenced more thrift than the town of Casas Grandes has produced by its centuries of Latin-American occupation and is a striking object lesson.

1899 Misc. Notes

The most prominent vegetation on the hillsides where the mt sheep were killed near upper end of Lake Sta. Maria were Echinocactus, Opuntia, Dasy-lision, Gramma grass, Ocotilla, Small juniper (6397) Sage brush (plant with seeds bunched along tip of stems in club shaped masses) and just along the upper border of Larrea mex.
From stains on horns & heads of sheep it seemed evident that they were eating the red fruit of the Opuntia.
